Latest Developments

A tight blockade has been imposed by the Syrian government forces on Khan Al-Sheih Camp for Palestinian refugees, in Damascus western outskirts, for 64 days running in spite of a deal struck with the opposition battalions.

Key to the deal was the retreat of opposition fighters and over 2,500 Palestinian refugees from the camp to Idlib, in northern Syria.

AGPS correspondent said Palestinian refugee families in the camp have run out of basic food items and life-saving medicines.

He warned that several refugees risk die of cold due the lack of fuel reserves and the power blackout rocking the camp for the fourth day running.

Prior to the newly-struck deal, 12,000 civilians, including 3,000 children, used to take refuge in Khan Al-Sheih. 197 refugees sheltered in the camp were killed since the outburst of hostilities.

Meanwhile, an AGPS reporter quoted activists as stating that 40% of the residents of Al-Husseiniya Camp for Palestinian refugees, in Rural Damascus, have been denied access to their homes by the government troops.

The residents raised fears of arbitrary abductions at government checkpoints pitched around the access roads out of and into the camp. Several refugee youths and activists are also feared kidnapped by the government patrols for alleged affiliations with the opposition forces.

AGPS kept record of the abduction of a number of women at Syrian government checkpoints and the destruction of activists' homes in the camp.

On August 16, 2015, a number of displaced Palestinian families were allowed a safe access into their homes in the camp following a two-year ban.

In another development, AGPS documented the death of at least 3,402 Palestinian refugees in Syria due to war-related incidents.

Shelling took away the lives of 1,128 refugees while violent clashes between the government battalions and the opposition brigades killed 813 refugees. 456 others were, meanwhile, tortured to death in Syrian regime lock-ups.

AGPS detailed statistics are available on the group's website: actionpal.org.uk

At the same time, the Palestinian refugee Khadija Ahmad Akleh was shot and injured by the Turkish border cops as she tried to reach out to Turkey, fleeing beset Syria.

A resident of the blockaded Yarmouk Camp in southern Damascus, the refugee sustained spine fractures after she lost footing and fell off a cliff in Khirbet Al-Jouz borderland. She was rushed to the Jisr Al-Shughur hospital in Syria for urgent treatment.
