Latest Developments

As winter approaches and temperatures drop, the suffering of more than 2500 Palestinian refugees who have been displaced from Khan AlSheih camp in the Damascus suburbs to the city of Idlib, aggravates. Hundreds of families continue to live in deteriorating conditions and in the full absence of UNRWA's relief role.

AGPS had previously and regularly published a number of appeals to UNRWA, on behalf of the families who held it responsible for their deteriorating conditions and not doing its duties towards them.

The displaced demanded that the agency responsible for Palestinian refugees in Syria carries out its tasks towards the hundreds of women and children suffering from poor humanitarian conditions in the city.

More than 2500 Palestinian refugees have been displaced from Khan AlSheih camp in the Damascus suburbs to the city of Idlib, since Monday November 28th, 2016. This came after a signed agreement between the Syrian government and the opposition in Khan AlSheih and its surrounding areas.

In a similar context, AGPS's correspondent confirmed the release of Ms "Moteea Ahmed Mubarak" and Ms "Amna Horan," whom Syrian forces had detained almost 15 days ago. They are residents of Khan AlSheih camp for Palestinian refugees in the suburb of Damascus.

More than 100 female Palestinian refugees are still in detention, out of more than 1600 prisoners whose locations remain mysterious.

In another context, pages close to the reconciliation committee in Sabina Town located in the Damascus suburb, published a list of approximately 60 names living in Sabina and including Palestinian refugees. According to the pages, those are the names of the people allowed access cards to the town, on Wednesday September 13, 2017.

Syrian forces had imposed entry cards on those returning to the area of Sabina and its camp, in the Damascus suburb.

The cards are obtained through the reconciliation committee and the Syrian forces' committees in the area. According to the reconciliation committee, the number of families that received the cards and returned to their homes in Sabina has reached 400.

On another note, UNHCR announced that 3600 refugees arrived in Greece last August, through the Aegean Sea, while only 2000 did in July.

UNHCR also confirmed that the majority are from Syria and Iraq and amongst them is a large number of children. They arrived in the Greek Islands of Lesbos, Chios, Samos and Leros. The elevated numbers in August is loading the reception capacities of the overcrowding camps, as well as obstructing the efforts made to improve the situation and increasing the difficult living conditions in the congested camps of the Greek Islands.

60 thousand refugees and displaced people are now present in Greece, mostly from Syria and Afghanistan. They are living in camps across the country.

The number of Palestinians of Syria stranded in Greece are estimated to be 400, including families, women, children and elderly people, most of which are on the Islands of (Lesbos, Mytilene, Chios, Leros and Kos). They are living in refugee camps or large reception halls. Most of the refugees fled from Yarmouk, Deraa, Aedin and Al-Husseiniya camps in Syria.
