In another context, the Action Group's correspondent in the Khan Al-Sheih camp for Palestinian refugees in the suburbs of Damascus, reported the news of the Syrian security's arrest of three men from the camp named: "Amer Al-Taher," "Mohammed Ersan" and "Khalil Zaher," a few days ago. They were taken to an unknown place and no information has been revealed about their whereabouts so far.

The Syrian regime forces had detained a number of the residents of Khan Al-Sheih, after groups of the opposition left in coordination with the regime. At the time, it raided the headquarters of the relief institutions in it.

AGPS's documented statistics indicate that 244 refugees from Khan Al-Sheih camp are still detained by the Syrian regime.

In the same context, the number of detained Palestinian-Syrian refugees in the security branches and Syrian intelligence is approximately 1662 detainees. The arrests have been documented for the past seven years.

According to AGPS's Monitoring and Documentation Team, at least 106 of the detainees are women, in addition to a number of families who have been detained altogether.

The Syrian regime continues to detain Palestinian "Adnan Talaat Al-Lolo," born in 1962 and resident of Yarmouk camp, for the fifth consecutive year. place and no information about his fate or location have been relieved to this point.

In Europe, though, the presence of Palestinian refugees from Syria has been relatively recent in a number of European countries, most of them are facing significant problems in learning the local languages, such as German, Dutch, Danish, Swedish and Norwegian, since the refugees had not used these languages before. These problems are primarily concentrated among the elderly, as most of them have been cut off from education for more than four decades, which makes learning a new language very difficult for them.

The lack of knowledge of local languages for newcomers to European countries is one of the main obstacles in their way to get to work, complete their studies or start their own businesses, in addition to many problems they may face in dealing with official institutions in those countries.

Most official bodies in Europe have employed a large number of Arabic translators, in an attempt to facilitate communication between them and refugees in particular, in the fields of health and migration.

In another context, thousands of Syrian Palestinian refugees have been forced to leave Syria are having great difficulties in renewing their Syrian travel documents, due to the high costs of renewals and the difficulty of the procedures.

The Palestinian-Syrians are being treated as Syrians regarding the procedures for the renewal or granting of travel documents. Renewing the travel documents costs about 300 American dollars with a waiting period, or 800 American dollars if it is to be renewed within three days. Usually the travel document is renewed for only two years.

While refugees find great difficulties in communicating with consulates and Syrian embassies because of overcrowding on the one hand and the spread of the "appointment brokers" phenomenon, through close associates of the embassy or consulate staff working on the sale of appointments for money sometimes amounting to $300.

It is worth mentioning that the valid travel document is a prerequisite for the Palestinian-Syrian refugees to stay in most of the countries where they have taken refuge.
